

Rhonda Mitchell's Biography

Rhonda Mitchell was born in Paterson, New Jersey. She was always inquisitive about how things worked, and loved the challenge of putting things together. With her fascination for how things work, Rhonda enrolled in Rowan College of Glassboro, New Jersey, and chose Biology as her major.

Rhonda considers herself a servant. From the time she started her career, her employment has been a position of service to others. Her earlier career consisted of working with individuals in retail, a nursing home, and a manager for a communications business. Her current position is also one of providing service to others.

Rhonda currently works as a Program Manager for W.C. Smith. Her first position with W.C. Smith was Assistant Manager for collections. She mastered the position in such a way that she was interviewed for another position with W.C. Smith, then selected to manage a pilot Program for families who had been staying at DC General, and in hotel rooms, to find permanent housing. That shelter closed down. Due to the closing of the shelter, "Building Bridges to a Better Life" was created to provide both housing and the services these families needed.

Rhonda possesses a special skill-set which helps others to grow. Her skill-set includes: dedication, caring, consistency, compassion, trustworthiness, motivation, passion, and a strong drive to steer others in the right direction. She also has the ability to create uplifting, and creative workshops that stimulate individuals to reach their full potential. Through "Building Bridges to a Better Life," Rhonda not only helps others, but finds her job so rewarding and encouraging, that it helps her to grow also.
